		I love people who pay genuine compliments on a regular basis. My coworkers do this a lot, and it has really helped to shape a positive working environment. The most important thing is that they're meaningful comments - not just "Hey you're a cool person," but, "I really like how you handle your job. You're a go-getter and you have a positive energy." They're things that are specific about me and so hold a hundred times more meaning than a well-intentioned "Hey, you're a great person."
		I try to do this myself. I used to only feel comfortable complimenting people (even strangers on the street) on their clothing, but now I try to branch out too. What am I afraid of, being labeled sentimental? If what I'm saying is true, then it's worth saying.
		People hear negativity all the time. Why do we have to be stingy with our positivity? Encourage people to keep doing what you think is good through positive encouragement."

The authorization covers only the initial two shots; the vaccine is not yet approved for boosters or for use in children, per the Washington Post's Carolyn Y. Johnson.
		Currently, about a third of Americans—or 100 million individuals—are unvaccinated.
		"Having a protein-based alternative may be more comfortable for some in terms of their acceptance of vaccine," said Peter Marks, the FDA's director of the Center for Biologics Evaluation and Research, during a meeting of the agency's independent expert committee, per The Verge's Nicole Wetsman
		The Novavax vaccine works similar to how vaccines against shingles and influenza work, reports the Post. It delivers coronavirus spike protein cells to the body, which invokes an immune response. It also contains an adjuvant, which boosts the immune response to the vaccine, per a statement from the FDA.
		"Protein-based vaccines like this have quite a long history—from hepatitis to meningococcal B, to HPV," Novavax's chief medical officer Filip Dubovsky told BBC News in April. "I think some people are reassured by the decades of safety profiles which are based on this technology.""

Not gonna rant about this anymore as he's taken too much up of my emotional energy already.
		And then about an hour ago I just saw I failed one of my modules at uni and I know I can redo it but like I've always struggled with my intelligence as whatever is going on in my brain has just made me dumb most of my life. In school and college I'm pretty much just used to only failing things so this is just a long line of fail after fail after fail.
